Title Latina virtual private network software for windows vpn. turned And Mechanical Manipulation Materials V 1 Â· Liebherr L544 L544t Wheel.Posted by samzenpus on Wednesday March 29, 2012 @04:07PM from the living-in-the-cloud dept. astroengine writes "Since cameras are still a closed platform, people who hack around with them are often faced with a dilemma: are they to obtain a license to distribute the photos and videos or are they to run the risk of legal reprisal? A Stanford law professor has come up with a novel workaround: simply don't bother, and store the data online. This is all in line with the prof's OpenBSD advocacy. In an interview, he noted: 'If your photos could be used in a criminal prosecution in the future, wouldn't you rather they weren't stored in a way that makes it easy for them to be retrieved in any way?' If you can't be bothered getting a license, then be bothered getting arrested." No, you're just a lazy ignorant tosser who lives in a bubble with no exposure to the real world. You can't purchase a license to distribute photos because (a) there's no real business model for such a thing and (b) there's no certainty that the government won't suddenly decide that they want a license to distribute photos. Because that's what happens when you let government tattle-tattle, prevent lobby-alliance, and control the false narrative. And I'd rather take my chances with the government than the private sector. I'm sure the private sector wouldn't do a thing to help me if the government said: "my agents can arrest you for taking photos of that girl at the
