We have used a rat calvarial model to examine the effects of copper oxalate on the carrageenan-induced primary inflammatory response and the maturation of bone in the rat. The inflammatory response was examined by counting the number of inflammatory cells in a 2 mm section of calvarium in association with an adjuvant and by determining the levels of IL-1 beta and TNF-alpha. It was observed that 2.5% copper oxalate suppressed the inflammatory response and that at this concentration 2.5% copper oxalate also inhibited osteoclast formation. Furthermore, in vitro studies were used to examine the direct effects of copper oxalate on osteoblast differentiation and proliferation. The number of cells in the bone marrow was determined in the presence of copper oxalate and the number of cells increased above control values. We conclude that 2.5% copper oxalate suppresses the inflammatory response and has little direct effect on osteoblast differentiation and proliferation.David Herd went to hospital after suffering a hip injury during training for next month's Miami Triathlon, while fellow British triathlete Tony Buckley is currently withdrawing from the race after breaking both legs while doing training on Saturday. Both Herd and Buckley sustained the injuries while training on Saturday - Herd on his bike and Buckley while running and rolling. At the moment Herd is in hospital having an operation, but Buckley is expected to need more surgery to repair the fractures to his legs. Buckley had been involved in the preparations of the Triathlon, including taking part in a running test at the swim venue yesterday. Buckley's wife Louise Buckley wrote on the sportive website runguide.co.uk: "Today has been a very bad day for us. "It started with the news that the dream swim of the race had been moved to the next day because of low water levels. "We had hoped that we might have a swim in this race. "
