What's new:

Flaming Friday Night is a double album by the American singer-songwriter Tom Waits released in October 1973. It was his second LP and it is now considered one of his most consistent releases. The album chronicles the troubled times in Waits's life in the early 1970s and encapsulates the sound of the period. Since its release, the record has gained acclaim and is hailed as one of the finest concept records of this decade. Background By 1973 Waits was becoming established as a major rock & roll artist, with significant radio and album success. As recorded on his landmark album Swordfishtrombones (released in 1970), he was a markedly different musician from the smouldering folk singer of his debut, Closing Time (1968). Unlike Closing Time, whose songs were of the same general theme, the music on Flaming Friday Night not only provides a thoughtful reflection on the bandido chic lifestyle that infested 1970s American cities, but seems set in the context of a more general state of decline in the mid-1970s. It also marked the transition from punk rock that flamed up in San Francisco to the more epic, wistful, post punk rock that set in with the emergence of new wave in both Britain and North America and especially the US. A notable absence from the liner notes of Flaming Friday Night, however, are any references to the band Waits was playing with, "The Heartbreakers". The Heartbreakers gained a modicum of notoriety the year before for their single, "Come Back" (also on the album Parer Street). "Come Back" was a hard-edged, scuzzy, no-nonsense rocker that was clearly evidence of a new form of rock & roll. However, despite the rockers penchant for lengthy, often dragged out solos and Keef Hartley's efforts at a plaintive croon, the lyrics to "Come Back" are relatively upbeat. The much more subdued Flaming Friday Night record, with its uneasy mix of classical composition and rock & roll influences, seems comparatively tame by comparison. The sound of the band (which included Hartley, Vito DePietro, George Mraz, Dean Stockwell, James Hooks and Tish Hinojos) on which the record was recorded was also different. Originally the band was called "Landfill", and Hartley had recorded as the band "Deerhoof". Waits eventually changed the band's name to "The Heart
