Click to Choose.. xforce keygen Revit 2019 Å .Q: AngularJS Component Containing HTML, working inside but not on its own I've got a component named MyComponent which has an input that displays its own data but not the data from its containing component. Its some code below MyComponent I am the header, inside this component Inside my-component's ngOnInit this.bindValue = this.input.nativeElement.value; this.input.nativeElement.value = 'newValue'; this.header.nativeElement.innerHTML = 'newValue'; this.content.nativeElement.innerHTML = 'newValue'; On each line of code, the console logs the correct value from the input, but it doesn't update the surrounding components. What am I doing wrong here? A: Try this, constructor() { this.bindValue = this.input.nativeElement.value; this.input.nativeElement.value = 'newValue'; this.header.nativeElement.innerHTML = 'newValue'; this.content.nativeElement.innerHTML = 'newValue'; } The reason is you need to actually change the value inside your component so that angular will be able to pick it up. DEMO Police using force on the fringes of the action With the US Olympic games in Vancouver, British Columbia, just around the corner, police services across Canada have been thrust into the spotlight in a bigger way than ever before. With the big sport showing the red, white and blue, questions of Olympic security have come to the fore. While Vancouver's police chief Bob Monate has a reputation as a firm believer in law and order, his counterparts in Montreal and Toronto have seen their departments stretched to the limits by a few incidents involving aggressive or violent crowds, as well as an unprecedented amount of media attention. "We're hoping that people remember that there are still a lot of normal, everyday people
