N.Y. (RNN) - New York health officials warn that the state's coronavirus data are being skewed by mistakes and delays in testing. On Thursday, Gov. Andrew Cuomo said the death toll due to the disease had increased by 205, and the number of patients admitted to ICUs had increased by 324, as a result of a re-analysis. There were 3,529 patients hospitalized, including 2,034 in intensive care units, as of Thursday morning, Cuomo said. The governor said the state did 4,100 tests on Thursday, but the real number of tests performed may be double that. "I understand your concern, but all things being equal, the numbers are on the same page," Cuomo said at a press conference. "I'm always concerned about the quality of the data." Cuomo announced Thursday that the state's online health dashboard would be updated to include additional data next week. Staten Island is the hardest hit borough in New York with 874 confirmed cases so far, up 77 from Wednesday's report. Westchester County, which includes New York City and the Hamptons, reported 256 coronavirus cases for a 22 percent jump since Wednesday. The New York Department of Health said that at 2:15 p.m. Thursday, 25 state labs had reached capacity, and the labs located in Albany and Syracuse were running tests but the report on the actual
